The Transformation Continues

by William Halliar

By reinventing itself as Friendship Botanic Gardens, what many have known as the world-famous International Friendship Gardens is experiencing a transformation that serves as an exciting and fascinating tale of vision, imagination and teamwork.

The Gardens have been part of Michigan City’s heritage since 1936, when they were developed by Virgil and Clarence Stauffer based on their experience designing gardens for the 1933 Century of Progress International Exposition in Chicago. Land developer Frank Warren had attended Chicago’s World’s Fair and was so inspired by what he saw there, he invited the Stauffer brothers to design a similar exhibition in Pottawattamie Park. His vision was to create a garden dedicated to “Peace and Friendship among All Nations.”

The park prospered in the 1930s and grew in popularity through the 1960s, becoming a destination place for folks from around the world. Heads of state from England, Persia and other countries donated plants, bells and sculptures to decorate the ethnic gardens. Many from faraway lands visited our area to dedicate the gardens at Michigan City.

Since the late 1960s, the Gardens, like many other public venues that rely on volunteers for their growth and existence, has languished in an era of “every man for himself.” Now, they have entered into a new and exciting time that promises great growth and a new botanic theme that will catapult it through the 21st century as a destination place for the whole country. The change in name and theme, while still espousing international friendship, now stresses the botanic diversity of our Lake Michigan dunes country.

Already, Loyola University Chicago, North Dakota State University, Valparaiso University and our own Purdue University Northwest have expressed an interest in studying plant culture and helping preserve the ecosystems found in the Gardens.

All of this comes about through the vision and heart of John Leinweber, the board president of Friendship Botanic Gardens. He is a businessman, but more than that, he has great pride in Michigan City and is inspired by working with, and attracting, the most talented people to share in his projects. With this spirit in mind, he has added 17 new members to the board. And it is a very active one, indeed, including landscape architects and botanists with the skill and knowledge to breathe life back into the venerable old garden.

Sitting down with Leinweber over a cup of coffee, one cannot help but become excited about what transformations have been accomplished, and the vision of what is to come.

Officially stated, the mission of the new board is “to create an idyllic setting for outdoor recreation, meditation, momentous cultural events and environmental education programs.”

This year, the Gardens has six dedicated staff members to maintain the grounds and daily operations. They include a host for the welcome cabin, two groundskeepers, a business manager, wedding coordinator and, perhaps most importantly, a communications coordinator to let the world know of the wonderful new things happening at the old garden.

Since Leinweber took over as board president, nine accomplished professionals from diverse fields have joined in the revitalization effort. He praises the board's work because its effort has led to many capital improvements, including the installation of several new individual gardens, and the construction of a bridal cabin donated by board member Mary Fox in memory of her late husband.

Three new sculptures now grace the verdant setting, and the new groundskeeper has installed a new aerator and fountain in Lake Lucerne. Leinweber praises his active board members, who are not afraid to get their hands dirty in the gardens, and have personally undertaken intense cleaning, weeding and restoration.

The most exciting projects are still to come as Leinweber and his board, with a vision towards the future, plan the next stages of the garden's growth. A new trail is planned for 2016 that will lead visitors to a hidden artesian well where groundwater can be observed bubbling out of the ground from a subsurface aquifer flowing and trickling into garden streams.

A renowned landscape architect is planning the transformation of the front entrance to the Gardens to create a stunning first impression. A garden dedicated to diabetes is being planned by board member Kevin Egan. This will expand the scope of the Gardens and give voice to a new generation of friends, opening a new way of envisioning the purpose of the local attraction.

This year also will see the unveiling of the most ambitious project the board has tackled yet: The Children’s Garden. This attraction will feature state-of-the-art children’s playground equipment. Other new elements are in the planning stage: a Veterans’ Memorial Garden; a Cancer Survivors’ Garden; a Perennial Garden on the island in Lake Lucerne; and a Labyrinth Garden.

In addition to the many new physical additions, it must not be forgotten that the reason for the Gardens’ existence is to provide an “idyllic venue for weddings and special events.” Friendship Botanic Gardens is a 105-acre sanctuary for flora and fauna that “enriches the community through environmental stewardship” and appreciation of the visual and performing arts.

The nonprofit organization also hosts a number of educational events throughout the year, as well as cultural and entertainment programs. This weekend, in fact, marks the first of three concerts in the “Music Under the Stars” series. Ensuing programs are July 23 and Aug. 27.

The schedule for the remainder of 2016 includes:
• June 26: A “Bug Safari.”
• July 31 — Native American Heritage Day.
• Aug. 7 — “Dragonflies Alive” education program.
• Aug. 21 — “Butterfly Education Day.”
• Sept. 11 — Polish Fest.
• Oct. 16 — Oktoberfest.
• Oct. 29 — Haunted Trails and Ghost Stories.
• Nov. 24 — Thanksgiving Turkey Walk and Native American Celebration.

Attend any of these events, and you’ll rediscover Friendship Botanical Gardens and, in the process, the joys of nature right in our own backyard.

“Finding Dory” Nearly as Charming as the Pixar Original

by Andrew Tallackson

Over the years, Pixar has elevated its stature to degrees so faultless, we arrive at each new exquisitely crafted entertainment with the expectation of perfection.

It is an unfair measure of anticipation, especially for the sequels, which must preserve the essence of the first picture, while enticing a relatively new generation of youngsters and their families.

“Finding Dory” exists as prequel and sequel to 2003’s now-classic “Finding Nemo.” It shifts the focus from not-ready-to-cut-the-cord Marlin, a clown fish, and his exceedingly curious son, Nemo, to Dory, a bubbly Blue Tang fish with crippled short-term memory.

Dory, of course, was brought to life in the original by Ellen DeGeneres in a voice-over performance that rescued her stalled career from cardiac arrest. With her immeasurable comedic talents at the helm of the sequel, Dory is more than capable of dominating a story of her own. But after the wrenching first 15 minutes of “Finding Dory,” we get the feeling we’ve seen this before, and we have. The movie is the exact same story as the original...until the last half hour when its soars toward a finish that is as clever, invigorating and heart-rending as anything Pixar has achieved.

Technically, the wizards at Pixar find ways to top themselves. Some of the ingenuity is so subtle, you might miss it, as when Nemo and Marlin squabble, their reflections rippling across the ocean surface above them. It is meticulous, gorgeous artistry.

The story setup is flawless — lively, emotional and terrifying as returning director/co-writer Andrew Stanton establishes Dory’s back story. As a tiny young thing, her parents (voiced by Eugene Levy and Diane Keaton) drill safety measures into her forgetful mind, while carefully attempting to boost her sense of independence.

(The movie is equally about family as it is living life to the fullest amid a permanent disability.)

Dory is, of course, separated from her parents, and as she cow-ers in a tiny alcove, composer Thomas Newman emphasizes a solo string instrument that conveys such aching loneliness, anyone who doesn’t choke up at the image has a heart set in stone.

We learn how and why Dory’s path crossed with Marlin’s, but the bulk of the action unravels one year later. Triggers exist within Dory’s mind — imaginatively conveyed by Stanton as the camera whips around her to reveal the character at a younger age — that suggest it’s time for her to search for her parents. Marlin and Nemo are willing to lend a hand, and the trio ends up at a California aquarium, complete with a spectacularly funny running gag involving a famous voice overheard on the loudspeakers.

The hurdles that arise, however, in locating Dory’s mother and father lack the effortless zeal of the original. Even with Ed O’Neill lending gruff appeal to the role of a cantankerous octopus, you can feel the wheels grinding, the complications one too many. In some cases, they are, well, they’re blah, like the near-sighted whale and her insecure beluga whale companion.

Even so, Stanton knows these characters have endeared themselves to us, and he lets them cast their spell on us all over again. It is during the quiet moments, in fact, when Nemo has a heart to heart with his father, or Marlin reminds Dory of why they’re friends, that the movie achieves a state of grace.

Which is a good thing, because when the closing act arrives, Stanton whips up a breathless climax that bounces along between laugh-out-loud ingenuity, carefully choreographed action and deeply felt sentiment. You’re so invigorated by the big finish, any prior quibbles feel insignificant. There is so much heart and imagination up there on the big screen, how anyone could walk away from “Finding Dory” unsatisfied remains a mystery.

Shirley Heinze Land Trust Celebrates 35th Anniversary at Annual Benefit

Shirley Heinze Land Trust celebrated 35 years of land conservation in Northwest Indiana on June 4 at Valparaiso University’s Harre Union, with more than 400 supporters and guests in attendance.

Michael Puente, Northwest Indiana correspondent for WBEZ Chicago Public Radio, was the master of ceremonies. Board President John Swanson noted other significant anniversaries this year, including the 50th anniversary of Indiana Dunes National Lakeshore and the National Park Service’s centennial.

Headlining the program was Sir Peter Crane, former director of the Field Museum of Natural History of Chicago and the Royal Botanic Gardens at Kew, England. He now is dean of the School of Forestry and Environmental Studies and professor of botany at Yale University.

Crane noted there are many reasons to engage in conservation.

“For some, it is about protecting critical watersheds, for others it is about maintaining habitat for birds, plants and other wildlife, and for others it is just about securing the glory of nature for future generations,” he said.

“For me, it is about all these things and many more. But for every one of us, whether we are acting as private citizens or as representatives of not-for-profit organizations, or even businesses, securing and conserving for the future, it is a profoundly altruistic and forward-looking act. Northwest Indiana is already a wonderful example, to our region and to the world, of purposeful conservation action.

The work of the Shirley Heinze Land Trust is vital to that continuing effort.”

Kris Krouse, Shirley Heinze Land Trust executive director, paid tribute to those who played a role in the organization’s 35-year history, including the founding benefactors and past donors, board members, volunteers and staff.

She also spoke of the organization’s plans for the future, which include geographic expansion to include St. Joseph, Marshall and Starke counties, and doubling the amount of protected acreage. Funds raised during the evening’s “Funding the Future” paddle auction will be used to support the plan.

As part of its five-year strategic plan, she continued, the organization aims to increase staff, collaborate with partners in land conservation and develop long-term financial security.

Shirley Heinze Land Trust has been protecting natural land in the southern Lake Michigan watershed since 1981. More than 1,900 acres in Lake, Porter and La Porte counties have been preserved for the public’s benefit. Visit www.heinzetrust.org or call (219) 242-8558 for more information.

Solo Exhibit Opens at Village Gallery

A meet-the-artist reception for painter Don Kegarise is at 1:30 p.m. Sunday, June 26, at Valparaiso's The Village Gallery.

Working mainly in acrylics, the solo exhibit features old grain elevators along the Michigan Trail, from Rosston to Rochester. Many have been torn down in the past years.

Mesmerized by the vast expanse of flat land and large sky, Kegarise decided Indiana was a perfect place for an artist to live. He moved from western Pennsylvania, and soon he and his family settled in Kewanna, Ind.

As a self-taught artist, Kegarise began drawing as a young child. He received his first oil paints at 14, beginning his career in oils, but has since worked with pencil, pen and ink, colored pencil, watercolors and now mainly acrylics. His works feature landscapes, old barns, farms, vehicles and buildings. His work is scattered throughout the U.S., Europe and South Asia.

In addition to his many paintings, Kegarise has created calendars and coloring books for the Indiana Department of Natural Resources featuring pen and ink drawings of state park inns. He also is a talented woodcarver; his miniature replica of the Cass County Gustav Dentzel Carousel will be on display. He created the 1/12 scale model of the historic carousel, carving and painting each of the 43 animals in the original's likeness. The animals carved from basswood feature giraffes, deer, horses, rams, a lion and tiger, as well as two sleds.

The Village Gallery is located at Pines Village Retirement Communities off Calumet Avenue north of Cumberland Crossing. Hours are 8:30 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. Monday through Friday. Call (219) 465-1591 for more information.

Barker Leaving Save the Dunes

Nicole Barker is leaving her post as Save the Dunes executive director, assuming the position of director of capital investment and implementation for Northern Indiana Commuter Transit District’s South Shore Line in mid-July.

Now, the regional nonprofit has the bittersweet task of finding someone to replace her. Barker, however, remains committed to working with the organization as a volunteer.

“It has been an absolute honor for me to work for an organization as important and impactful as Save the Dunes,” Barker said.

Over the past six years, Save the Dunes has addressed many threats to the dunes. It brought $1 million in funding to restore more than 1,100 acres of globally-imperiled black oak savanna at Indiana Dunes National Lakeshore and Indiana Dunes State Park. It has acquired more than 100 acres of land for future donation to the National Lakeshore. It also is in the final stages of developing a manual for nearshore dunes community residents to remove invasive species.

Under Barker’s leadership, Save the Dunes also convened a team called the Indiana Dunes Ecosystem Alliance to consider the dunes ecosystem as a whole — blurring the lines of ownership — and set priorities together. That group included government agency representatives, scientists, nonprofits and NIPSCO.

For 2017, a project will begin in partnership with Chicago’s Field Museum to create a climate adaptation strategy for the Indiana Dunes.

Information about the executive director position is available at tinyurl.com/gpa23vc. The deadline to apply is 5 p.m. Friday, July 15. Visit www.savethe-dunes.org for additional details.

Rotary Club Aids Clean Water Effort

Michigan City Rotary Club has donated $1,000 to help buy a new water tank system for Central Mexico school children.

Matching dollars from District 6540, which encompasses 55 clubs, including Michigan City, and the Rotary Foundation helped fund the $3,500 cost for each system.

Since 2004, the Heart 2 Heart program has been undertaking humanitarian projects, such as providing clean water to schools in Mexico City and the surrounding rural areas.

The water tank system primarily consists of a 2,600 gallon tank connected to a school’s internal plumbing system to supply water to faucets for drinking (it includes a filtering system) and to bathrooms for toilet flushing and hand washing. Each school’s plumbing varies, and often the Rotarians and school parents have to rework (and add to) the existing plumbing to accommodate the new water system. The average school size for the recipients of Heart 2 Heart tanks to date is about 800 to 1,500 students per school, and the tanks all have been placed in grade schools.

A typical tank primarily is steel, weighs about 2,200 pounds and has an expected life of 30 to 40 years or more, depending on the average quality of water in the tank and the average quality of maintenance. Plastic tanks are not used because they are subject to more damage and vandalism, can be easily moved if empty, have a shorter life span and can weaken with harsh weather.

Indiana Trails Board Wins Award

The Indiana Trails Advisory Board has been named 2016 Outstanding State Recreational Trails Advisory Committee.

The award is part of the Coalition for Recreational Trails Annual Achievement Awards. The winner is chosen by the National Association for State Parks Directors awards committee.

The TAB is composed of 15 volunteer board members who represent various trail-user groups. The Indiana TAB ensures the state receives more than $1.2 million annually in Federal Highway Administration grants for the Recreational Trail Program.

The DNR Division of Outdoor Recreation administers the grants to applicants for non-motorized and motorized trail-development projects. Since 1994, nearly $19 million in Recreational Trails funds have been invested in Indiana trails.

The Indiana TAB also advises DNR Director Cam Clark on important trail matters. It meets four times a year to discuss issues and share ideas, resources and news. Meetings are held throughout the state so the board can see different trail projects and participate in outdoor recreation activities.

Prayer to the Blessed Virgin

(Never known to fail.)

Oh, most beautiful flower of Mt. Carmel, fruitful vine, splendor of Heaven, Blessed Mother of the Son of God, Immaculate Virgin, assist me in my necessity.

Oh, Star of the Sea, help me and show me, herein you are my mother. Oh Holy Mary, Mother of God, Queen of Heaven and Earth! I humbly beseech you from the bottom of my heart to succor me in this necessity. There are none that can withstand your power. Oh, show me herein you are my mother. Oh Mary, conceived without sin, pray for us who have recourse to thee (3x). Holy Spirit, you who solve all problems, light all roads so that I can attain my goal. You who gave me the divine gift to forgive and forget all evil against me and that in all instances in my life you are with me. I want in this short prayer to thank you for all things as you confirm once again that I never want to be separated from you in Eternal Glory. Thank you for your mercy toward me and mine. The person must say this prayer 3 consecutive days. After 3 days, the request will be granted. This prayer must be published after the favor is granted.

ESTACO BUILDERS/REMODELERS
Shaker: A Novel by Scott Frank

(hardcover, $26.95 in bookstores and online; also available as an eBook)

Earthquake hits Los Angeles. Disrupts cell service, buckles highways, and just when you think it’s over, there’s the aftershocks. About a week later, Roy Cooper flies into LAX from New York. He’s there to take out Martin Shine. What’s he to Cooper? Nothing. Cooper doesn’t even know him. It’s just another hit job.

Earthquakes, hit men, OK, nothing so different so far, right? Here’s where it gets interesting.

After picking up his rental car, Cooper heads out with written directions to Shine’s house. He has trouble finding the apartment building, so he is forced to park his car and walks around the block, eventually finding the address. He goes in, does his job and heads out to his car. Yeah, the car. Where is it? Cooper can’t find his rental car. Strange city, it’s dark, there are a dozen excuses he could use. So he keeps on walking.

Coming around a corner, he finds an old white guy in a jogging suit being harassed by several young black boys. And yes, they have guns.

Decision time, Cooper. Does he turn around and pretend he didn’t see what was going on, or does he go to the old man’s defense? No time to work out the logistics as a gun is put to Cooper’s head by another black kid who sneaks up behind him. Rookie mistake, Cooper. I’ll save the details for your reading pleasure and just say a rent-a-cop stumbles in the middle, shots are fired and Cooper is down with several gunshot wounds thanks to the wild shots of the overzealous cop.

Here’s one of life’s great ironies. Cooper is declared a hero thanks to a cell phone video shot by a nearby neighbor — a grainy picture that seems to show Cooper trying to help the old guy out of a very bad situation. And the old guy, who is killed by the boys, turns out to be a mayoral candidate!

The mayor and the boys meet in the hallway, and the mayor sees a photo op as one of the boys is in a wheelchair. So, he has a photo taken of himself with the boys after they tell him they’re there to see their dying mother. How will the mayor’s staff spin that one when they find out they are Cooper’s shooters?!

Flashbacks are well used to explain Cooper’s early life, his abusive father and indifferent mother, and his years in juvenile detentions for a crime he didn’t commit.

The story moves on to more uproarious escapades, hits and misses, until you can’t stop laughing at the absurdities one minute and gasping at the cruelty the next. The climax comes at a baseball game where all participants converge not knowing each other is there: some to kill Cooper, some to kill Science, some to arrest Cooper and Science and, well, some to watch the ball game. But that might be hard to do...

The climax is about as thrilling as it gets. Frank’s description of mass mayhem will have you on the edge of your seat—I guarantee it! This is entertainment with a capital “E.”

Frank is a well-known Hollywood screenplay writer. This is his first novel, and I can easily see it being made into a movie. Frank wrote “Little Man Tate” and “Dead Again,” while his screenplay adaptation for Elmore Lenard’s “Get Shorty” was nominated for a Golden Globe and Writers Guild Award.

He’s written screenplays for “Heaven’s Prisoners,” “Minority Report,” “The Interpreter,” “Marly & Me” and “The Wolverine.”

Publishers Weekly: “Screenwriter Frank’s well-plotted first novel will remind readers of Tom Wolfe’s novel The Bonfire of the Vanities.”

From bestselling author Linda Fairstein: “Scott Frank brings an exciting new literary voice to the crime genre — totally unique, with a hint of homage to the great Elmore Leonard.”

Off the Book Shelf

by Sally Carpenter

from identifying him and his friends. Oops, I almost forgot. When word gets back to New York and Cooper’s associate, Albert Budin, finds out about what went down in L.A., he’s on the next plane to silence Cooper forever for his incompetence.

In one memorable sequence of events, Scott Frank shows his uncanny ability to set up a scene so absurd that, well, it’s just perfect! Here’s what happens: The mayor decides to visit Cooper in the hospital at the same time Science and his friends decide the same thing (only for very different reasons, of course!).

Flashbacks are well used to explain Cooper’s early life, his abusive father and indifferent mother, and his years in juvenile detentions for a crime he didn’t commit.
